Last month our country suffered another tragedy when there was yet again a mass school shooting in Parkland, Fl. On a day when our nation was celebrating the prospect of love, and when countless Christians began the Lent season reflecting on their sin and need for a Savior; Nikolas Cruz walked into Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School and began shooting students and teachers leaving 17 dead and numerous more injured. The media responded with questions which quickly escalated into pontificating accusations. "We need more gun control." "We need more armed teachers." "We need more mental health care reform." "It's the NRA's fault." "It's the FBI's fault." "The Democrats are to blame." "The Republicans are the reason." "It's the liberals!" "It's the conservatives!"

Sadly, tragedies like this have become all too common for this nation. Nary a day goes by that someone is killed in some senseless act of violence. I can remember laying in my dorm room at Campbell University when I first heard the news about Columbine. My brother and Martha were both in their senior year of high school. I remember being at Centrifuge in Charleston when a gun man went into a theater killing unsuspecting patrons as they watch The Dark Knight. I remember how close the shooting at Newtown struck home, because I had a child who was about to begin kindergarten. I remember too, the flurry of questions/accusations during all those incidents as well. However, I think if most of us were honest; February 14, 2018 was just a blip on our radar. We mentioned in prayer on Wednesday, discussed how tragic it was....and then moved on.

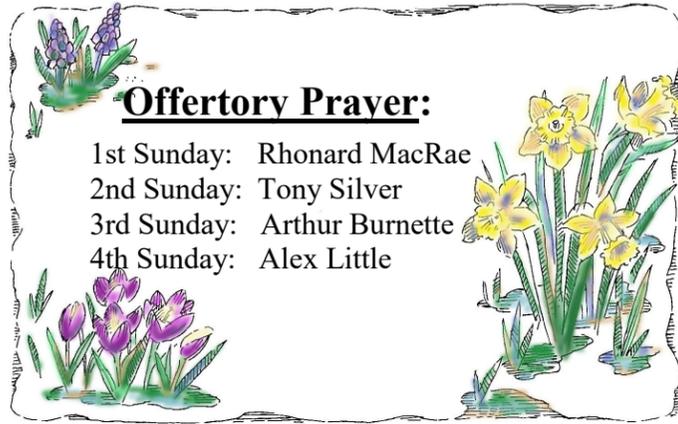

Lost in all this is the tragedy that 17 people lost their lives. 17 people left this world to meet their maker and their eternal fate. By all accounts, we can assume that all that died had reached their age of accountability. The age of when they will answer to God for how they have responded to Jesus and His offer of salvation. None of them woke up that morning saying, "Today is the last day of my life. I've made my peace with Jesus. If necessary, I'm prepared to die." None of their friends or family thought that it would be the last time they would see their loved one. The Christians who knew them thought that they had their whole lives to share Jesus with them, to witness to them, to make an eternal difference. But now?... ..Now they are gone.

If there is anything for us learn from this as Christians, it's not that we need more gun control or to more heavily guard our schools. It is that we are not guaranteed tomorrow, and neither are our loved ones. If there is any response we should have its not a political one, but a loving, evangelistic one. Those who died that day their fate is sealed. If they were Christians, their legacy will have to speak for them. The Christians who surrounded them? Their opportunity to make a difference in their lives is now gone. Are we going to be witnesses to those around us? Or are we going to politely and quietly let them die and go to hell? Are we going to learn this time? Or just ignore it and move on?

Cleft Notes

2018 is moving right along and it won't be long before we're wondering what happened to it. Before we know it, this year will pass us by, then another, then another, and so on. A reminder that time marches on and is a respecter of no one. Have you ever given thought to the most valuable treasure you possess? What it would mean to others if you were to share your valuable treasure with them? I'm speaking of our relationship we have in Christ. I'm sure God understands how brief our lives are (like a mist which comes and is gone) and how natural it is for us to keep a good thing to ourselves. I also know that He never intended for us to keep His gift of salvation a secret from others nor to be afraid to openly share His gift with others and to help accomplish this sharing. He equips each of us with a gift to empower us as we share. The Church offers us so many opportunities to exercise these gifts openly among other Christians to help build our confidence for openly sharing in our neighborhoods and places of work. So don't be afraid to say yes when approached to help in different Church ministries. Our Lord may be preparing you for a vital task in your family or social circle. Blessed be the name of our Lord.

Bro. Stephen Willie
